CIVIC ENGAGEMENT SCHOLARS

PROGRAM & RECEPTION
MONDAY, MAY 20 • 4:00 PM
COLLINS CONFERENCE ROOM
JAMES WEST ALUMNI CENTER

THE UCLA CENTER FOR COMMUNITY LEARNING

UCLA
UCLA’s Centennial offers an opportunity to reflect on the civic purposes and community engagement that have marked the past 100 years. From its origins to prepare future educators, UCLA’s generations of graduates have contributed to every field of human endeavor. UCLA’s alumni are civic leaders, public servants, and leaders in the non-profit sector. We are truly an institution that is committed its mission “to serve society through both teaching and scholarship, to educate successive generations of leaders, and to pass on to students a renewable set of skills and commitment to social engagement.”

UCLA was one of the first universities in the country to be recognized for its outstanding work to realize its civic mission by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. In 2005 and again in 2015, UCLA received the Community Engagement classification for its “alignment among campus mission, culture, leadership, resources, and practices that support dynamic and noteworthy community engagement.”

Leading the way through its mission, programs and service to the university, the UCLA Center for Community Learning promotes opportunities for community engaged scholarship, teaching and learning at UCLA in collaboration with communities and organizations in Los Angeles and beyond. The Center strives to make community-engaged learning a cornerstone of undergraduate education through its work with faculty in academic departments across campus.

The Center supports community-engaged courses that both provide learning experiences and research opportunities relevant to their fields of study and create value for our community partners. The Center itself offers undergraduates a variety of learning and research opportunities: community-engaged courses and internships, the Civic Engagement minor, the Astin Fellows program, two AmeriCorps programs--Jumpstart and JusticeCorps, and, of course, the Astin Scholars program, which we celebrate today.

The marking of our Centennial offers an opportunity to envision a new era of civically engaged work at UCLA, one that connects the myriad individual programs and projects to amplify the potential for positive social impact. As we begin our next century, community-engaged scholarship will be more visible—to ourselves on campus and within the Los Angeles community. Students will find pathways to link their passion for community service or social entrepreneurship with deeper, more critically informed community engagement. Faculty will find it easier to identify, and connect with, colleagues who are working on related issues or working in common community contexts. Community partners and neighborhood residents will better see what work UCLA is doing in their neighborhood, will gain greater access to such resources, and will have a greater voice in shaping the future of this work. We look forward in great anticipation of how UCLA and Los Angeles will continue to grow as one.
WELCOME

On behalf of the Division of Undergraduate Education, it is my distinct pleasure to welcome you to the 10th Anniversary Celebration of the Astin Scholars Program. Community-engaged research has long been a top priority at UCLA, and I am thrilled to celebrate ten years of Astin Scholars as a highlight during Undergraduate Research Week here on campus.

UCLA also turns 100 years old this month, a once-in-a-lifetime milestone that compels us to reflect on our past achievements and look ahead to the future. I am truly grateful to Sandy and Lena Astin for their vision, leadership, and commitment to our scholars and the larger community. It is because of programs like the Astin Scholars that Bruins have been able to conduct groundbreaking research and make critical contributions to our society in its first century, and will continue to do so into its second.

Congratulations to this years scholars, I commend your hard work and know that this experience will propel you forward in your academic career and beyond.

Patricia A. Turner
Senior Dean and Vice Provost
UCLA Undergraduate Education
On behalf of the Center for Community Learning,
I am delighted to welcome friends, colleagues, alumni, our current cohort of Astin Scholars, and community members to the 10th Anniversary Celebration of the Astin Scholars Program.

This extraordinary program is steeped in the pioneering and visionary scholarship of Lena and Sandy Astin. In their own words, “Civic engagement is a powerful means for developing our students’ knowledge and values, and for creating leaders who are prepared to deal with society’s most pressing problems.”

Today, we commemorate a decade of Astin Scholars and “premier” a very special video showcasing Astin Scholar Alumni reflecting on their unique and meaningful experiences in the program. Having had the privilege to take part in conversations with our alumni scholars (and the shooting and editing of the video), I am deeply impressed with the lasting impact the Astin Scholars program has had on their life trajectories. As you’ll soon see, their participation in the program afforded them a depth of new knowledge, instilled a deep commitment for community engaged research and social change, and ultimately shaped their career choices.

You will also meet the 2019 Astin Scholars, who have, for the past year, developed thoughtful research for social change with our community partner, the Mar Vista Family Center. I would like to extend our deepest thanks to Lucia Diaz, the CEO of Mar Vista Family Center. Lucia has created an incredibly rich and collaborative environment at the Family Center, welcoming our students into their important work. The meaningful partnership between our programs has had a tremendous impact on our students, which we are confident will extend beyond their time here at UCLA.

Our program will conclude with an opportunity for you to circulate among our current Astin Scholars, read their research posters, and learn more about their individual research projects. Don’t miss the chance to meet this next generation of scholars who follow in the footsteps of Lena and Sandy Astin.

Thank you for your interest and support!

Shalom D. Staub, Ph.D.
Director
UCLA Center for Community Learning
The Astin Scholars Program is named for visionary UCLA higher education scholars Helen (“Lena”) and Alexander (“Sandy”) Astin to honor their nationally recognized body of research in the area of civic engagement.

Lena and Sandy Astin are among the most cited authors in the study of higher education, particularly in regards to the development of students while in college. Indeed, their scholarship helped to shape the field, and much of what we know today about the faculty and student experience is informed by their decades of research. This includes the responsibility of colleges and universities to strengthen democracy by preparing the next generation of civic leaders and creating conditions for the building of community. The Astins’ prolific research addresses the effects on students’ civic engagement through such activities as service-learning and community service, documenting how those activities affect students’ spiritual and character development, and what we know about how students go on to participate in civic life after graduation. Their social change model of leadership development is foundational to modern student affairs practice.

Our celebration of 10 years of undergraduate community-engaged research builds on this foundation of Lena and Sandy’s scholarship.

The mission of the Mar Vista Family Center (MVFC) is to provide low-income families with quality early-childhood education, youth enrichment, and educational tools to create positive change in their lives and their communities. Every program adheres to the basic premise that it is critical to empower children, teens, and adults to play vital and responsible roles – as decision makers, community leaders and advocates, mentors, classroom volunteers, and fundraisers – at MVFC. MVFC utilizes a whole-family model of engagement to make positive change in its community, encouraging parents and their children to participate from the early stages of life, into preschool education, and continuing through various youth programs meant to enrich a child’s development at all stages through the high school years (and beyond). In support of their mission, the Center focuses on achieving three goals: development of leaders, educational enrichment, and the promotion of personal growth.

Serving the Del Rey neighborhood just west of Culver City and east of Marina del Rey, Mar Vista Family Center is located just a block from Mar Vista Gardens, the westernmost housing project operated by the Housing Authority of the City of Los Angeles. Through its unique Shared Responsibility Curriculum Model, MVFC has helped transform a community once filled with urban gang violence and unsafe streets into a thriving, healthy community — and given its residents a safe space in which to learn, grow, and lead.

The Astin Scholars program represents a capstone community-engaged research opportunity offered by the UCLA Center for Community Learning. The Center’s work directly addresses Chancellor Block’s priority to make a difference in the civic life of Los Angeles and positively impact communities locally and globally. The Center’s staff work with faculty across the university to support community-engaged teaching throughout the curriculum. Along with such university-wide work, the Center offers the Chancellor’s Award for Engaged Scholarship, the Civic Engagement Minor, Internship Courses, and two AmeriCorps programs: Justice Corps and Jump Start.

You can join us in our work to provide undergraduate students access to community-engaged coursework.

• Become a community partner
• Provide financial support for students’ transportation costs to community sites
• Fund an Astin Scholar
• Provide scholarship funding for summer internship courses
• Support the development costs for new community-engaged courses

To support Astin Scholars and other community-learning programs please contact us at mlotfollahi@support.ucla.edu and (310) 206-8786
